Hallmark Cards

In today's world of emails and text messaging receiving greeting cards in the mail has become a lost art. My friend Anne always seems to find the funniest greeting cards. She sent me this one for Easter which gives you a child's perspective of the Easter Bunny compared to a cat. A little cruel I know, but funny. I apologize for the blurry picture. I'm still working on perfecting my photography skills. While I enjoy the ease of emails, I think there is something to be said for actually receiving a card or hand written note from someone. It just seems much more personal. I also appreciate the time and effort that goes into sending a note or card by mail in spite of our fast paced technology driven lives. I'm all for going green and saving trees, but I hope sending cards doesn't become obsolete. To steal a line from Hallmark cards "sometimes people need to know you care enough to send the very best. Happy Easter!
