It's amazing what you can discover at Costco. I hadn't ventured into Costco for at least a month. I have a membership to both Sam's Club and Costco through my husband's work. I like Costco's food items are a lot better, but Sams is more convenient. I was thrilled to find Costco carried pizzelles. My mother makes pizzelles every Christmas. They are a thin Italian cookie that's made with an iron similar to a waffle iron. My mother makes them with anisette which has a black licorice taste to it. I'm not positive, but I think that's how they are traditionally made. I have a pizzelle iron, but it only makes two cookies at a time. It's a bit labor and time intensive so I was happy to find Costco sells a huge container of vanilla pizzelles for $5.99. They aren't quite as good as my mothers, but they are good enough.

My second find was triple creme cheese. A friend of mine told me about this rich, soft and creamy cheese. It's delicious spread on a slice of crusty french bread. I think it's similar to a brie cheese. It can be difficult to find because it sells out quickly. It's also a bargain at $10.99 a pound. The third item is sea salt and black sesame wildrice crisps. I bought these when a friend was visiting who is allergic to gluten. There are a lot of gluten free items out there which aren't very tasty, but these are delicious. I now buy them for myself. Feel free to leave a comment on any Costco items that are your favorites.
