I heart chick-fil-A

I was struggling with what to write about today, until something happened this weekend that made me smile. My family loves Chick-fil-A chicken biscuits. We have them almost every Saturday morning for breakfast. My daughter's friends have even requested it for breakfast when they spend the night. They aren't spoiled by any means. For Valentine's Day Chick-fil-A even made heart biscuits. The sentiment wasn't wasted. I appreciate those special little touches and was delighted when I opened the foil package. It made me smile.

This past weekend obviously wasn't Valentine's Day, but we did have Chick-fil-A for breakfast. My husband went through the drive through like he normally does because God forbid I get dressed before 10:30 on a Saturday morning. When he came home with our biscuits he said the person in front him paid for our order. He didn't know the person. It was someone in a truck with a Texas license plate who performed a random act of kindness. He was going to pay for the person behind him, but for some strange reason there was no one behind him. That's unusual for a Saturday morning. These little random acts of kindness make me smile. Has a stranger ever done something nice for you? Please share your story in the comments.
