

Why I Blog

Description

default watermark

I often have to check in with myself and ask the question, “Why do I blog?” Blogging is a way for me to creatively share and document my favorite finds, recipes, places and experiences. Blogging can be very time consuming, but I enjoy it and it makes me accountable. I’m a huge procrastinator and my blog gives me some structure in terms of getting things done and trying new things.

I enjoy writing and photography and I'm able to work on those skills through blogging. I've grown and learned a lot since my first post on February 2, 2012. My friend Adri said she likes to go back and read the first post of blogs. It shows how we all have to start somewhere and people typically don't start off being experts at everything. It gave me the motivation to look back on my own work and see how much I've grown. If you find yourself with a little down time this holiday season you can look back on my past posts by clicking on the Archive button in the right side bar of my blog. I've also added a drop down menu to my recipes category at the top of the page so you can search for past recipes a lot easier.

I'm inspired by all of the creativity that exists in this world, and I enjoy sharing those projects that catch my eye. I have a lot of creative friends and I often enjoy sharing their work. Sometimes I get a little tired of writing about myself. I'm also inspired by the good that exists in this world. I believe it's all the little things you do each day that are most important. My hope is that by sharing all of these things, it inspires you to try something new and share a little bit of yourself with others.

I appreciate when I receive comments or when you share a post on facebook, pinterest, twitter or google plus. When that happens I feel like Sally Field at the Academy Awards, "They like me, they really like me." It not only boosts my ego, but helps me grow. Thanks for taking the time to read my blog. I hope you'll continue to follow me as I learn and grow.

For those of you that subscribe to my facebook page, facebook is trying to get pages like mine to pay for you all (my followers) to see my posts. If you don't want to miss a post, can you please do me a favor? Hover over the "Liked" button at the top of my page, & click on "Get Notifications." This help ensures you don't miss a thing! Also, commenting, liking or sharing posts helps more of you see my posts as well. I promise I won't overload your news feed. I typically post once or twice a day and share other posts that inspire me.

Happy Holidays to you all. I hope you feel JOY in your hearts this holiday season and have a great start to the New Year! I will be taking a little break until January 6.

Date Created

2013/12/23

Author

queenie