I WANT YOU

FOR FEEDBACK!

I'm continually learning and growing in life and as a blogger. I would love for your constructive feedback as readers. When it comes to blogging, the way I grow is by improving my skills and providing content that interests you. You can help my blog grow by sharing posts you find helpful or like with others. If you're a blogger you already know this, all to well. As a community I feel most bloggers try to help each other and share information. I have many friends tell me they enjoy reading my blog, yet only a small handful share a post or leave a comment. It could be you are technically challenged and share by word of mouth. If that's the case then thank you for doing so. For those of you that are regular readers please let me know if there is a way I can improve my website that would entice you to share it with others.

1. Do my navigation bars at the top of my blog make sense?
2. Can you find what you are looking for? I've added a drop down menu to the recipes category so that you can select a certain type of recipe.
3. Is it easy to leave a comment and share on my blog?
4. What types of posts do you find worthy of sharing?
5. Is my blog easy to read?
6. Does my blog load quickly on your page or do you get frustrated with the loading time?

My intention for writing this post isn't for compliments, although words of affirmation are nice and it happens to be one of my love languages. You can read more about The Five Love Languages here.

My intention is to make sure my website is reader friendly and inspirational. I still have a lot to learn, but one thing I've learned is that I need to always stay true to myself. I need to give my husband a shout out, because he has told me this from day one. I can't please everyone. What you won't find on my blog is posts about politics, the stock market or sports scores. I also find it hard to write about just one topic because I have many different passions. Recipes are very popular posts for me and so I've asked a few friends that love to cook to be regular contributors so I can offer more in the future.

I hope you'll leave constructive feedback in the comments on ways I can make my blog more reader friendly. I'm grateful for your readership and comments.
