It's been a while since I've shared some of my pictures on my Instagram feed. For those of you who follow me on Instagram you may have already seen these pictures. I'm always surprised though how many things people don't see, therefore I tend to overshare at times. Timing plays a big factor when it comes to social media and people automatically think you see everything they post which isn't always the case. Many people just announce everything on Facebook and assume you know what's going on in their lives. Here are a few things that have been going on in mine.

I traveled to Florida last month to work on scheduling updates on a home my parents will be living in. The master bathroom and kitchen are being totally remodeled. My initial vision was something like this white kitchen I found on Magnolia Homes (as in Joanna Gaines) Instagram Feed, but that totally wound up changing. Once everything is completed I hope to show some before and after pictures.

These two are best buddies. The schnauzer on the left is my dog Fritz and the other handsome fella is Charlie. My friend and I often dog sit for each other when we are traveling. These furry friends bring me joy and we are fortunate they stay out of trouble.

One of my favorite books last year was Me Before You by Jojo Moyes. I read the sequel After You last month and while it wasn't the page turner the first one was it's still a great book. I've included my Amazon affiliate links if you are interested in purchasing either book.

I indulged a little too much on sweets this fall and winter and I'm paying the price now. However, I can't imagine a life without chocolate. These Brookside Crunchy Clusters are worth every calorie. The Sam's Club in my area sells a big bag and I've also seen smaller bags in Price Chopper and Target.

March 2 was Dr. Seuss Day. There is so much wisdom to be found in his books amongst all of his wit and whimsy. I stumbled across this quote of his and I believe there is much truth to these words.

Thatâ€™s a little peek into some of my simple joys. Iâ€™m curious, what are some of yours? Tag me on instagram if you use the #simplejoys or #livecuriously.
